What does field experience give the student? (the analysis of the questionnaires)

- to acquire and systematize knowledge in the legal sphere;
- the ability to gather and analyze statistical data, meet with citizens and to draft responses to their applications;
- the opportunity to gather information for their semester papers course and diploma works
- most importantly, the majority of the students receive the invitation to work in these agencies.

For the teacher-field experience supervisor

- this is an opportunity to update their knowledge,
- to apply the data received in their own classes
- to conduct joint research and projects

But...

- not always the authorities are interested in the students since the high tempo and level of responsibility impose greater demands on their work, in other words, the authorities can function without interns.

What to do?

- if field experience is properly organized, it can be very interesting and useful for both sides
- field experience instructors frequently serve as experts of the students' research
- Joint research with the university also contributes to the development of management bodies.

Thus, based on the results of a joint examination of the institutions, the teaching staff of the Department were awarded by the Minister of social development
